Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, type, style, method of construction, setting, size, and significant features. Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

The Martin J. and Mary Condon Residence is situated in a quiet residential neighborhood on a short, dead end street, Vista Place, in Manoa valley. It sits on a small, level, 4,654 square foot lot with a lawn on all four sides. The single story, bungalow style dwelling's lateral running composition shingled, clipped gable roof runs perpendicular to the street, and features brackets, overhanging eaves and exposed rafter tails. The house is distinguished by two projecting porches, one open and one enclosed, on its front, southwest facing, side. Both of these porches have clipped gable roofs. The single wall, double board house sits on a lava rock and post and pier foundation with a horizontal slat apron, and has 7" wide horizontal lap sided walls. The 1,200 square foot house is in good condition and very much retains its integrity of design, materials, workmanship, location, setting, feelings and associations.

Narrative Description

A repaved, concrete driveway runs down the southwest side of the property past the house to a reconstructed carport, which does not contribute to the historic character of the property. A straight, short concrete sidewalk leads from the driveway to the front, west corner of the house.

Here three concrete steps access the northwest, street, side of the front porch. The 8' x 18' porch has no balustrade but Tuscan columns support its two outside corners. The porch is 27" above the ground and has a tongue and groove floor and ceiling. The floor boards run front to back, while the ceiling boards run laterally. The rear wall of the porch has a pair of entry doors to the left and a pair of 1 x 1 double hung sash windows to the right. The screen and entry doors are both intact. Each of the entry doors has ten lites and both retain their original glass knobs and hardware.

The entry doors lead into an L shaped living-dining room. The living room space runs the entire length of the northwest side of the house, while the dining area runs partially across the front of the house. The two spaces have a 9' high gypsum board ceiling and oak floors with 9" high baseboards. The room has paneled walls which terminate with a simple crown molding. A band with a 1" x 1.5" rail runs around the room, 38" from the floor, providing the wall with a wainscoted appearance. The northwest facing wall has a set of four 1 x 1 double hung sash windows facing the street, and a pair of similar double hung sash windows is in the northeast wall. New sconces supporting a pair of "candles" graces the wall on either side of the bank of four windows. Another pair of 1 x 1 double hung sash windows is in the front wall of the dining space.

Two doorways in the southeast wall of the dining space lead into a kitchen and hallway. The opening into the kitchen has no door, while the hallway's opening has a single panel door with its original glass knob. All interior doors and their hardware are of this design, unless otherwise noted. The kitchen, which runs along the front of the house, has been remodeled. However, it retains its v-joint tongue and groove walls and ceilings. The window in the front wall has had its jalousie replaced with 1 x 1 double hung sash vinyl window. An opening in the kitchen's southwest wall, allows the room to flow into the second projecting wing. This serves as a laundry room, despite its location on the front of the house. This "back" porch is enclosed with tongue and groove walls, and also has a tongue and groove ceiling. A large, rectangular, mesh screened opening is in its southwest wall. This opening has a square pattern lattice covering it. It is flanked on either side by a 1 x 1 double hung sash vinyl window. There is a similar window in the laundry room's northwest wall. In its southeast wall a new door leads out to a deck which connects the original house with 2020 addition.

The lateral running hallway terminates in a T at its southeast end. Doors open on each of the three bedrooms, the bathroom and the kitchen. The hall has an oak floor, v-joint tongue and groove walls and a gypsum board ceiling. A simple crown molding, similar to that in the living-dining room, mediates the wall-ceiling transition. There are two doors in the northeast wall of the hallway. The one furthest from the living-dining room has a historic glass knob and opens on the hall linen closet. The door closest to the living room opens on a bedroom. This room has oak floors, as do all the bedrooms. Also, it has v-joint tongue and groove walls and ceiling, and features a picture rail running around the four walls of the room. The other two bedrooms also share these same features. The room's closet door has its original metal knob. A pair of original 1 x 1 double hung sash windows are in its northeast wall.

At the head of the hallway's T there are three doors. The two in the hall's southeast wall open on the other two bedrooms. The walls, ceilings and floors are the same as in the first bedroom described. The bedroom in the east corner of the house has a pair of 1 x 1 double hung sash windows in its northeast wall. In its southwest wall are two closet doors, both are single panel and retain their historic glass knobs. The southeast-most door has a beveled mirror mounted in its single panel. A new single panel door with a new handle, in the southeast wall of the room opens on a new bathroom, which was part of the 2020 addition to the house. The bedroom in the south corner of the house has a pair of 1 x 1 double hung sash windows in its southeast wall

A door in the northeast wall of the T leads into a bathroom. This room has been remodeled, but retains its v-joint tongue and groove ceiling. A 1 x 1 double hung sash vinyl window is in its northeast wall, having replaced a non-historic jalousie window. An opening in the T's northwest wall goes into the kitchen.

The Condon residence retains a high degree of integrity, reflecting its original design. The only major changes have occurred in such secondary spaces as the bathroom, kitchen and laundry room. It retains almost all its original windows and doors, and the few windows that had jalousies now have vinyl double hung sash windows. These openings are on a side elevation and not readily visible to the street. The single story addition is at the rear of the property and not visible from the street. It is L-shaped and has a southwest facing gable roof. It is connected to the house via the deck and the wing extending from the rear, east corner of the house. The connecting wing contains the master bedroom bath and the northeast-southwest running main body of the addition contains a bedroom and a bath. The addition is compatible with the original house in terms of scale, and has similar walls, a composition shingle roof and a post and pier foundation. A practiced eye will notice that the exposed rafter tails in the addition's overhanging eaves are a different dimension than the original house's rafters and also differently spaced.

The 1928 period of significance was chosen in accordance with the instructions on how to complete a national register nomination form provided in National Register Bulletin 16A: "For architecturally significant properties, the period of significance is the date of construction and/or the dates of any significant alterations and additions" The date 1928 reflects the year the house was constructed.

The craftsman/bungalow style is an American architectural style and philosophy that began in the last years of the 19th century. As a comprehensive design and art movement it remained popular into the 1930s. The American craftsman style has its origins from the British arts and crafts movement which began as a philosophy and artistic style founded by William Morris in the 1860s. The British movement was a reaction to the industrial revolution with its perceived devaluation of the individual worker and the dignity of human labor. Seeking to ennoble the craftsman once again, the movement emphasized the hand-made over the mass-produced and urged social reform. The American arts and crafts movement shared the philosophy of the British reform movement and encouraged originality, simplicity of form, local natural materials, and the presence of hand craftsmanship. It was concerned with ennobling the modest homes of the rapidly expanding American middle class, a concern embodied by the craftsman bungalow style. The movement's name came from the magazine, The Craftsman, founded in 1901 by designer, furniture maker, and editor Gustav Stickley, and was popularized through such national periodicals as House Beautiful and Ladies' Home Journal.

The style is usually associated with a low horizontal profile, gabled roofs with wide, unenclosed eaves, often with figure four brackets, battered columns, partially paned entry doors, wide dormers with more than one window, and the use of natural materials. On the interior there is an emphasis on openness, built-in furniture and finely crafted, unpainted woodwork.

Few pure craftsman style residences were constructed in Hawaii, and even fewer remain standing, with the Krauss and Burningham residences being two of the best examples. Both of these adhere to the bungalow aspect of the tradition. The earliest bungalows known to have been built in Honolulu date from 1909. The style became a popular domestic architectural form in Hawaii from 1913 through the 1920s. Hawaii's earlier bungalows, built during the teens are characterized by hip or hip-gable roofs, while those from the 1920s primarily feature gable roofs. Despite the popularity of the style and the fact that a fair number of these residences still stand in Honolulu, only a relatively few have been placed in the Hawaii or national registers of historic places.

Seven examples of bungalows constructed on Oahu during the 1920s are presently listed in the Hawaii Register: the Noble, Peterson, Horn, Grimshaw, Hoogs and Newcombe residences in Manoa, and the Clark and Stephens residences in Nuuanu. These all have gabled roofs.

The Condon residence is a good example of a bungalow from the 1920s built in Honolulu. It differs from the typical bungalow of the period by its use of clipped gable roofs, both on the main body of the house and also its two projecting porches. The orientation of the house, with its façade facing the side of the lot rather than the street is also distinctive and not very commonly seen in Honolulu. Another unusual feature of the house is the placement of the "front" and "rear" porches adjacent to each other. Also the use of Tuscan columns elevates the house above the typical bungalow form, which often employed battered or paneled columns. However, the dwelling's projecting porches with their front facing clipped gable roofs and figure four brackets, as well as the use of local lava rock in the foundation are all typical of the bungalow style, and readily convey the style to the passerby. Similarly the roof's open, overhanging eaves with exposed rafter tails is a common bungalow feature in Hawaii, providing the house with a lower profile. In addition, on the interior, the flowing living-dining room space is also associated with the bungalow style in Hawaii.

There appears to be less than thirty clipped gable bungalows in Honolulu, and none are listed in either the Hawaii or national registers of historic places. In Kaimuki, a quick windshield survey in the area bounded by Third and Twenty Second avenues and Harding and Kilauea avenues discovered twelve clipped gable roofed bungalows, the majority of which no longer retained their historic integrity. Similarly in Manoa valley, a windshield survey of the area between Lowrey Street and the University of Hawaii found only five clipped gable roofed bungalows. In comparison to the other examples in Kaimuki and Manoa, the Condon residence handles the clipped gable form in a very distinctive manner. With its three very pronounced clipped gables visible from the street, it presents one of the most dramatic uses of this bungalow roof type so far found in the city.

Martin and Mary Condon purchased this property from architect J. Alvin Shadinger and his wife Edith May Shadinger on December 5, 1927, after the Shadingers acquired the parcel earlier in the day from the Security Investment Company. Shadinger came to Hawaii in 1914, and throughout the 1920s worked with developers to design houses on newly opened subdivisions, such as Hillside Avenue in Manoa in 1925 and the Bush Tract, which Villa Lane adjoins, in 1928. In addition, he also assumed the role of developer on a number of single lots on which he designed and had built speculative houses that he sold. As Shadinger designed other houses also on Vista place, including one for his daughter, Vivian Smith, it is assumed Shadinger designed this house.

Mr. and Mrs. Condon resided in this house until Mrs. Condon's death in 1940. Mr. Condon continued to live here until his death in 1957 at the age of 96; however he had sold the house to their daughter, Marguerite A. Kollars, in 1950. Mr. Condon was born in Kilkenny, Ireland in 1861 and came to Hawaii in 1899. He was employed as a molder by Honolulu Iron Works until his retirement in 1937.
